REPORT OF THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Federal Regulatory Programs And Activities

This report is an inventory of Federal regulatory programs and activities by agency and authorizing legislation. It identifies 120 Federal agencies with regulatory activity or program responsibilities.

These agencies are classified by substantive areas, such as power and energy, and natural resources and environment. In addition, the agencies have been classified by type of regulatory activity and degree of regulation.

PAD-78-33

MARCH 16, 1978

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20548

B-180224

The Honorable Edmund S. Muskie
Chairman, Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations
Committee on Governmental Affairs
United States Senate

Dear Mr. Chairman:

In response to your request of March 31, 1977, we developed a list of Federal regulatory programs and activities for use in preparation for hearings on the Regulatory Reform Act of 1977, Senate bill 600, 95th Congress. Your Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations requested that we provide program information on Federal regulatory agencies.

We prepared a listing of 95 agencies with regulatory program and activity responsibilities in a letter report transmitted to the Subcommittee on May 26, 1977. For each of the programs and activities we:

--provided citations of authorizing legislation;

--indicated expiration dates where specified in the law;

--grouped the programs by substantive area (power and energy, transportation, etc.);

--classified the agencies by type of regulatory activity;

--indicated authorizing committee jurisdictions; and

--included appropriation account numbers and subfunction codes to permit the material to be cross-referenced to the budget.

Due to the short time frame required for preparing the report, which was needed for the May 1977 hearings, we were not able to obtain agency comments or review all of the data for consistency and completeness. We expressed the view that a formal, more detailed reporting procedure that provided for agency comments and a legal review would improve the usefulness of this listing to the Subcommittee and to a variety of users. Your Subcommittee concurred and consequently, we prepared this revised report for the Subcommittee which will also be distributed to other congressional committees and to the executive agencies.

This report contains information on 116 agencies. As in our earlier report, we structured the listing by the four broad categories detailed in Senate bill 600. These categories group programs which were suggested for review during the same time frame. We added a fifth category to this report to cover additional programs and activities, such as civil rights, Indian affairs, aliens and nationality, and Panama Canal Zone Government. These programs were not listed in the Senate bill; therefore, we added them to make the report more comprehensive. Under these broad categories, we provided substantive area classifications. These classifications structure the data by program area, such as power and energy, natural resources and environment, etc., as in our earlier report.

LIMITATIONS

Apparently, no unified source of information exists on all regulatory legislation, and related programs and activities; agency information is not complete. Many agencies, in responding to our request for comments, provided information covering some of the laws which provide them regulatory authority. Generally, these agencies limited their responses to the one or two most significant laws they administer. We believe that for purposes of sunset review, in many instances, the less significant and more obsolete laws may be equally relevant. In part, because of their relative obscurity, we did not make an effort to independently research them.

We concentrated primarily on insuring (1) the inclusion of the major regulatory programs and (2) the accuracy of the listed citations of law and the regulatory program descriptions. We have made a limited effort to add law citations and program descriptions to our earlier report to make it more complete. Since some comments indicated interagency activities and relationships, they were helpful in preparing the program descriptions.

This report does not include every Federal regulatory program, but it is sufficiently comprehensive in illustrating the range of regulatory programs that do exist. In any further development and refinement of this list, we suggest that the administering agencies be held directly responsible for completeness and accuracy.

We did not review agency regulations implementing the laws because it would require a different kind of approach and analysis.

We included various energy agencies in our list that existed prior to the establishment of the Department of Energy. We did not attempt to reflect the impact of the Energy Organization Act because the precise location of all program responsibilities by organizational unit was not determined at the time we prepared the list and may not yet be completely settled. Program descriptions by section of authorizing legislation are correctly cited, and designation of responsibilities by former energy agency structures has been included for analytical purposes.

We did not include agencies with grants programs in the report unless they had regulatory responsibilities other than the enforcement of eligibility and compliance requirements. Some grant and assistance programs are included, however, because they indirectly influence the economy.

Generally, we did not include Federal regulation of the Federal sector. However, Federal civil rights agencies and programs are included because of their indirect influence on the private sector.

DATA SOURCES

In developing this report, we reviewed current work in the area of regulation. Our references included our overview of regulation entitled "Government Regulatory Activity: Justifications, Processes, Impacts and Alternatives" (PAD-77-34), a Congressional Budget Office report entitled "Number of Federal Employees Engaged in Federal Regulatory Activities" (August 1976), a report by the Domestic Council Review Group on Regulatory Reform entitled "The Challenge of Regulatory Reform" (January 1977), the U.S. Code, statutes, the Code of Federal Regulations, the President's budget for 1978, and professional journals.

The primary source for identifying the authorizing legislation was our data base, which was compiled to assist the authorizing committees with their annual preparation of Views and Estimates reports. Additional research yielded citations of law for specific regulatory programs and activities, and helped to identify additional regulatory agencies and programs.

In compiling our list of regulatory agencies, we began with the list provided in Senate bill 600 and added the other agencies which our research indicated had regulatory responsibilities. We also drew on listings compiled by the Congressional Budget Office and Domestic Council.

The Domestic Council's report was helpful in providing agency regulatory program descriptions. Our research further qualified the descriptions in terms of the authorizing legislation.

EXPIRATION DATES

Generally, we found that most regulatory legislation has no specific expiration date. When we made a search of the statutes and found no expiration date, we indicated "no date." In some instances, agencies had previously provided us expiration dates for the program or activities; generally, these dates indicated the expiration of funding authority only.

The expiration date information is not entirely complete. There were a few cases where we did not make a search of lengthy legislation to determine if there was an expiration date; if the agencies did not furnish us a date, we left the space blank.

CONCEPT OF REGULATION

The nature of the regulatory powers exercised by the agencies included in this report is not uniform. We understand the Subcommittee is interested in obtaining information on Federal programs which have an impact on the private sector by either direct or indirect regulation rather than the narrower perspective of the scope and legislative jurisdiction of independent regulatory agencies. Defining "regulation" in this context is somewhat troublesome in view of the well-established stature of the narrower, traditional concept of regulation. We felt this problem of definition might be avoided by describing the "programs" which have an impact on the private sector without categorizing them by a specific regulatory definition.

One agency--the National Bureau of Standards, U.S. Department of Commerce--was particularly difficult to classify and may serve as a good example of why definition, as opposed to description, would be too restrictive to serve the purpose of this report. According to Commerce Department officials, the Bureau is not a regulatory agency; it has no specific authority to require the private sector to use the standards it prescribes. Although the Bureau provides standards for the Nation's measurement system, it does not enforce compliance with these standards. However, nearly every private firm preparing a commodity for distribution includes information on weight or size on the label; and engineering, manufacturing, scientific, and educational institutions rely on the Bureau's measurement standards. Usage of the Bureau's standards and measurements is very widespread. The Bureau could be said to indirectly regulate without being a "regulatory" agency. Compliance, however, may not be entirely voluntary because statutes enforced by other agencies may require use of measurement standards which the Bureau has developed.

We classified the regulatory agencies in Appendix I by broad groups in order to offer an organizational structure that would provide a basis for analyzing the relative regulatory impact of the programs on the private sector. These groups classify the agencies by organizational status and the type of regulatory impact they have. We developed five groups of agencies:

--the independent regulatory agencies and commissions;

--bureaus and bureau offices having major regulatory responsibility within the Executive departments;

--agencies with authority to investigate and make recommendations without final regulatory authority;

--bureaus and bureau offices within the Executive departments which are not usually considered to be regulatory but have some regulatory impact on the private economy;

--specialized agencies, boards, and commissions which have a substantial impact on certain geographic regions, industry sectors, and groups (e.g., the handicapped, veterans, Indians, etc.).

The subject area classifications, developed at the Subcommittee's request, help to further structure this regulatory information. Examples of such areas are power and energy, natural resources and environment, transportation, communications, etc. We developed several subcategories for economic regulation, such as banking, commodities, securities, public finance, international trade, etc.

By using the subject area classifications, the reviewer can focus on specific program areas. We provided regulatory program descriptions rather than program names. This will allow users of this information to more easily discriminate between items they may wish to include or exclude from their analyses.

Appendix II, which indicates the degree of agency regulatory activity, divides the agencies into those that:

--are predominantly regulatory;

--have both regulatory and other program responsibilities;

--have regulatory activities as a very small portion of their responsibilities; and

--have authority to investigate, make recommendations, or set standards but no authority to make or enforce rules or regulations.

We trust this report will be useful to the Subcommittee in its further consideration of regulatory reform. We have discussed with your staff the potential usefulness of this report to other committees, Members of Congress and the public. As agreed with your staff, we are distributing this material to other interested persons.

Sincerely yours,

Comptroller General
of the United States

APPENDIX I

CLASSIFICATION OF REGULATORY AGENCIES

BY TYPE OF ACTIVITY

Federal regulatory activities take many forms. In this report, we have included a wide range of regulatory activities, such as licensing, setting or enforcing standards, and providing recommendations which have an impact on regulation.

This classification groups agencies according to organizational status and type of regulatory activity or responsibility they have.

GROUP I

This group includes independent regulatory commissions and regulatory agencies outside the executive departments.

These agencies have authority to set rates, issue permits, require disclosure of information, set safety requirements, or approve hiring and promotion practices.

Some of these agencies have program responsibilities outside the area of regulation. For example, the Environmental Protection Agency has authority to grant funds for waste disposal and anti-air pollution projects, etc., and the Energy Research and Development Administration had responsibility for various energy development programs.

Independent commissions and agencies

Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System
Civil Aeronautics Board
Commodity Futures Trading Commission
Consumer Product Safety Commission
Energy Research and Development Administration
Environmental Protection Agency
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission
Farm Credit Administration
Federal Communications Commission
Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation
Federal Energy Administration
Federal Home Loan Bank Board:
    Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation
Federal Maritime Commission
Federal Power Commission
Federal Trade Commission
Interstate Commerce Commission
National Credit Union Administration
National Labor Relations Board

Nuclear Regulatory Commission
Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission
Securities and Exchange Commission
U.S. Civil Service Commission
U.S. Postal Service

GROUP II

This group includes bureaus and bureau offices with major regulatory responsibilities within Executive departments. However, not all of the activities of these agencies are wholly regulatory. For example, the Federal Aviation Administration sets standards for air worthiness of planes, performance requirements for pilots and mechanics, and airport design; but it is also responsible for air traffic control and management of the Nation's airways, which is more of an operational than a regulatory program. Other examples of agencies in this class are the Coast Guard (which sets marine safety standards in addition to patrolling waterways and maintaining navigation aids) and the Drug Enforcement Administration (which classifies controlled substances and licenses manufacturers of legal drugs in addition to enforcing criminal sanctions against illegal drug importers and traffickers).

Executive branch bureaus

Department of Agriculture

Agricultural Marketing Service
Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service
Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service
Federal Grain Inspection Service
Food Safety and Quality Service

GROUP III

This group consists of agencies having authority to investigate and make recommendations. They are supportive of the regulatory process but do not have final regulatory authority.

Supportive agencies

Commission on Civil Rights
International Trade Commission
National Transportation Safety Board
Postal Rate Commission

Department of Commerce

National Bureau of Standards
- Institute for Basic Standards
- Institute for Materials Research
- Institute for Applied Technology

Department of Justice

Community Relations Service

GROUP IV

This group includes agencies which can be considered to have some impact on sectors of the private economy through the scope of their operating programs. For example, the Social Security Administration influences design and operation of almost all medical care institutions through its medicare program; and Federal Housing Administration, through its insurance program, influences housing design, construction, and mortgage standards. The Forest Service is included because of its responsibilities for determining amounts of land eligible for harvest by the private sector.

We have also included agencies with benefits or income security programs.

Agencies having an impact on the economy

Department of Agriculture

Farmers Home Administration
Food and Nutrition Service
U.S. Forest Service

Department of Commerce

Economic Development Administration
Maritime Administration

Public Safety Officers' Benefits Program

Department of Transportation

Urban Mass Transportation Administration

GROUP V

This group includes specialized agencies which have a substantial impact on certain geographic regions, specialized industry sectors, or specific groups of people. Included are the power administrations, which propose hydroelectric power rates in their specific regions, and the Small Business Administration, which licenses small business and minority business investment companies.

Specialized agencies

Appalachian Regional Commission
Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board
Canal Zone Government
Cost Accounting Standards Board
Delaware River Basin Commission
Foreign Trade Zones Board

APPENDIX II

CLASSIFICATION OF REGULATORY AGENCIES BY DEGREE OF REGULATION

We have applied a very broad concept of regulation in this report in order to provide a comprehensive list of agencies and programs for analysis. The degree of regulatory power exercised by the agencies in the listing is not uniform.

While we classified agencies by type of regulatory activity (see app. I), your Subcommittee asked us to further classify these agencies so as to indicate the degree of regulatory authority exercised.

We further classified these agencies to indicate those with:

1. Predominantly regulatory activities.

2. Regulatory activities in addition to other program responsibilities.

3. Regulatory activities which are a small portion of their responsibilities.

4. Authority to investigate, make recommendations, or set standards without enforcement authority.

INVENTORY OF AUTHORIZING LEGISLATION AND PROGRAMS BY AGENCY

This inventory provides the data requested by the Subcommittee for use in consideration of regulatory reform.

The listing includes data on 116 Federal agencies. We structured the listing by the four broad categories detailed in Senate bill 600, 95th Congress. These categories group programs which were suggested for review during the same time frame. We added a fifth category to cover additional programs and activities, such as civil rights, Indian affairs, aliens and nationality, and Panama Canal Zone government. These programs were not listed in the Senate bill. We added them to make the report more comprehensive. Under these broad categories, we provided substantive area classifications. This classification structures the data by program area, such as power and energy, natural resources and environment, etc.

For each substantive area classification, we listed the agencies having regulatory program responsibilities and described the nature of these activities.

For each of the agencies' regulatory programs or activities we (1) provided citations of authorizing legislation, (2) indicated expiration dates where specified in the law, (3) indicated authorizing committee jurisdiction, (4) described the authority for the program or activity as authorized by the specific section of the law, and (5) provided the appropriation account and subfunction numbers.

The table of contents (pp. 15 to 21) is an index to this data.

SUBSTANTIVE AREA Agency (Group) Public Law/Committee Jurisdiction, HOUSE/SENATE Title/Section/Expiration date Account Number (subfunction #)	REGULATORY PROGRAM DESCRIPTION
